These are seashells, the shells of various marine mollusks including both gastropod and bivalves. Each one was chosen to represent a maritime state, based on the fact that the species occurs in that state and was considered suitable to represent the state, either because of the species' commercial importance as a local seafood item, or because of its beauty, rarity, exceptional size, or other features.

Seashells. The beaches of North Carolina's coast attract shell hunters from around the country, and it is easy to see why. In 2008, the Ocracoke Island stretch of the North Carolina shoreline was recognized as the second best shelling beach in the country by Coastal Living magazine. Although Ocracoke Island was given this recognition, no matter where you stroll along the sand in North Carolina, there is a good chance you might find a special treasure to take home.
